“We come to visit here and would like to learn more about the special projects which we can fully support. We have both Thai and foreign teachers and also students who could help teach English to the community,” Dean Prakai informed the Assistant Chief Officer Chaiwat.

Dean Prakai added that in response to the policy of the Office of Higher Education Commission (OHEC), the College students should join with community members to carry out some joint activities for the benefit of the society.

Meanwhile, Mr. Chaiwat noted that there were some STIC students who earlier used to come to do volunteer work with the community members and villagers. Mr. Chaiwat remarked that the District faces many big problems such as the floods in the rainy season, drug abuse, and the low prices of vegetables.

“We, the district and provincial authorities are prepared to go out to help relieve the plight of the people at Wat Photaen, where about 50 mobile relief units will help hand out relieve kits, plus other products and services to those people who suffered from the natural disasters, like floods, drought and the low harvest prices

He added “Actually, we would need some development and improvement plans for English language and communication. Especially in areas such as business administration and public health that would help us respond to the upcoming Asean Economic Community integration next year,

“We are keen to invite Kaman, the village headmen, and community members to learn more English through listening and speaking. However there are many things that could be chosen for the future joint activity projects,” Assistant Chief Chaiwat concluded.
